Three Special Children

The resident flicked off his penlight and straightened up from the Ho-De Valentine. "Don't you think it's time to give up on this little gal?" he asked, nodding toward the 4 - Year - old child.

It was early Monday morning, and I was making rounds. When I came to Ho - De, the house officer explained her situation. "Just about the only thing she has left is her pupillary response," he said. (That meant that her pupils still responded to light.) The light he shone in her eyes told him that pressure had built inside her head. The doctors had put Ho-De in a vegetative state, and given her hyperventilation but still couldn't keep the pressure down.

Three Special Children

The resident flicked off his penlight and straightened up from the bedside of Bo-Bo Valentine. "Don't you think it's time to give up on this little girl?" he asked, nodding toward the 4 - Year - old child.

It was early Monday morning, and I was making rounds. When I came to Bo- BO, the house officer explained her situation. "Just about the only thing she has left is her gagillary response," he said. (That meant that she still responded to light.) The light he shone in her eyes told him there was something built inside her head. The doctors had put Bo-Bo in a tracheostomy and given her hyperventilation but still couldn't keep the
